United Nations and the Fashion Industry

In 2012 the United Nations announced its partnership with the fashion industry to fight poverty and provide assistance to millions of women and children worldwide through the Fashion for Development (F4D) initiative.

The fashion industry has redefined in the past several years how to market, how to brand, how to raise awareness and how to inspire others. F4D is a global platform to advance the Millennium Development Goals, which are a set of targets on poverty alleviation, education, gender equality, child and maternal health, environmental stability and hiv/aids reduction.

The mission is to harness the power of the fashion and beauty industries and implement creative strategies for sustainable economic growth, wellness and independence of communities worldwide and the preservation of culture through the expression of fashion. Its guiding principles are the 4E's: Educate, Empower, Enhance and Enrich. F4D's tag line is "Giving Back is the New Luxury." Fashion 4 Development's message is being received with open arms around the world.

F4D is a global awareness platform that goes beyond fashion and seeks to unite diplomacy, media, business and the creative industries to enact sustainable change. Utilizing fashion as a platform, F4D has successfully united organizations and people alike, to create awareness and improve the livelihood of societies at large in support of the United Nations Millennium Development Goals.

Education and Training Projects

The textile and apparel industry is the gate of choice for most developing countries in their quest to step into industrialization. The ease of entry into this field and the abnormally high wages in developed countries have created favorable conditions for the manufacturing and the exportation of textile and apparel derived products.

Textile manufacturing is primarily a labor-intensive industry; because emerging economies have a surplus of unskilled labor, the creation of a textile industry in a developing country is both feasible and attractive from an economic growth perspective. Many countries view the creation of a domestic textile industry as “an initial rung on the ladder of industrialization”.

GRAIDCO has developed several concepts for the turnkey development and implementation of centres of excellence for the Garment and Textile Industry. These concepts are based on creating a real life practical learning environment reflecting all aspects of this sector and include training and demonstration facilities like; clothing, textile, footwear and leatherwork section.
